Spiritual Perspective on Health Care Reform

There has been much debate in the US in recent years about what directions our nation's health care policy should take. People of faith wrestle with how their faith should inform and shape their understanding of this important topic. At the same time, faith-based healthcare, informed by Catholic Social Teaching and other broad principles drawn from the Christian faith, has served an essential role in the United States since the nation's inception, frequently being the only provider of care to the poor in numerous communities. That dedication to the vulnerable segments of society continues today. This presentation will focus on how social workers of faith can tap the resources of their faith to inform their thinking about health care reform and health care provision. In particular, it will focus on the principle of solidarity, drawn from Catholic social teaching, as well as a biblical understanding of what it means to be "our brother's keeper."

Tom Galvin, MSW, LISW

With twenty-five years of experience in the mental health field, Tom Galvin provides a focus on supervising and training counselors and psychotherapists in a community mental health setting. He earned a Masters Degree in Social Work from The Ohio State University and is a licensed Social Worker in private practice. Tom uses his extensive experience to understand the needs of his clients and to offer effective strategies for recovery for people of all ages and walks of life. Tom has also served as an adjunct instructor in the Department of Social Work and the Department of Sociology and Justice Studies at Lourdes University, Sylvania.

Counseling Tools and Supervising Skills: The "I & Thou" of Leadership

There is significant and accumulating data that supports supervision as a process that typically results in greater morale and organizational commitment. Yet, there is less attention to the interactive nature of the relationship of supervision that connects meaningful well-being on the job to the purposeful nature of the labor. This presentation will consider ways to enhance positive interactions with supervisees that increase the active sense of the interior experience of the supervisee and address the appropriate ego structure of the supervisee. Structure and techniques of the supervisor-supervisee relationship will be explored that allow for an understanding the benefits of acceptance over resistance, and ways of accessing enthusiasm to counteract burnout.
